version 8.5 brings major changes to the way page layouts are created and how the quarkxpress software handles text. in addition to the added autocomplete and copying and pasting text features, pages created with quarkxpress 8.5 are opened and saved as documents in an xml format. xml is not a new format, but the new system makes it easier to keep track of content in a way that can be used in other programs. version 8.5 of quarkxpress is a major step forward in terms of both ease of use and features. the new version also includes a major overhaul of the software's user interface. everything is now done in a way that makes it easy to use, even for those users with no previous design experience. the new interface features an innovative tool called "snaparazzi" that let you create a two-column layout without the need to have two copies of quarkxpress open on the desktop. this unique feature makes the software more accessible to novice users. the quarkxpress classic mode had been one of the most powerful features of the software since version 2.0. unfortunately, it was not available for mac os x 10.5 users. in version 8.5, it is back, and with some enhancements. the new edition of quarkxpress includes enhanced support for autolinking, new pre-defined typographic settings, improved v-stitching, font creation, the creation of matrix tables, and more. version 8.5 of quarkxpress is the last of three versions included with apple's snow leopard operating system. the upgrade version includes some important new features such as improved typography tools, and supports text services for pages. all other minor enhancements and bug fixes are included in the upgrade version.
